JUMP TO RECIPE

Ever since our first trip to Japan, I've been obsessed with matcha. Matcha ice cream, matcha doughnuts, matcha smoothies... I love them all, but my favorite way to enjoy matcha is in a creamy matcha latte. The slightly bitter matcha flavor mixes with (in this case) coconut milk to create a perfect creamy flavor balance. Often times, coffee shop matcha lattes are too sweet, which is why I prefer to make my matcha latte at home!

What is matcha?

Matcha powder is made from ground green tea leaves. Unlike when you drink steeped green tea, you consume the entire tea leaf in a matcha latte. As a result, matcha has approximately 10x more nutrients than regular green tea. For more on the many matcha benefits, click here. We, of course, love

Matcha powder has a slightly bitter, earthy taste that I love to use in sweet recipes like smoothies, ice cream, milkshakes, frosting, and even doughnuts!

How to Make a Matcha Latte

This matcha latte recipe is super easy. It's just three ingredients (and a tiny bit of sweetener, if you want), and you don't need any fancy barista skills or equipment. If you're going to make a lotta lattes you might want to invest in an official (and very cute) matcha whisk, but a small kitchen whisk or milk frother will foam it up just the same. Here's how you do it:

1. Start by sifting your matcha powder. It clumps easily, and the clumps can be difficult to whisk away, so this step will help make your matcha latte smooth, creamy & lump-free.

2. Add the matcha to a mug, and pour in hot, recently boiled water over it. Whisk vigorously until the matcha green tea powder is fully dispersed. You want to move your whisk in an up-and-down or side-to-side motion, not the usual circular pattern, in order to get your matcha to foam.
3. Pour the warmed coconut milk over the foamy water (almond milk is good too!) and whisk again to froth the milk.
4. Taste your latte and decide how much sweetener you want to add, if any. I like mine with a drop of maple syrup.

That's it! Enjoy.

What Is the Best Matcha Powder?

Buying matcha for the first time can be confusing – there are so many brands, and they vary widely in quality. I've tested out all of the top matcha powders as tea with water, in lattes, and in baking recipes. I like the Golde Pure Matcha Ceremonial Grade best in my lattes! It doesn't have any added sugar, and its bold flavor still cuts through the milk in a latte.

Instructions

1. Sift your matcha so it is lump-free.
2. Spoon the matcha into a large mug. Add the hot water and whisk briskly, in an up and down motion, until frothy - about 30 seconds or so. Add the coconut milk and whisk until well combined.
3. Taste and add additional water, coconut milk, and/or sweetener to your liking.

Notes

I used light coconut milk, but you could use full-fat coconut milk if you prefer a richer latte.

I had a feeling this was going to make the teeniest little latte and thought about doubling it but decided to stick with the recipe as is since I was testing it for the first time. It was yummy but I think I could drink 2 or 3 x the amount in one sitting lol

I don't know why, but it was so bitter on my end, even though I used high quality matcha. I had to add 1/2 cup coconut milk/oat milk and more maple syrup to cut the bitterness. In the end, I added ice to drink it. for some reason it was better that way. Will try with half the amount next time 😊

Not sure if this was the issue but if the water is too hot it can make it bitter.

Did you use boiling water? That would make it bitter. You need to use hot water (around 175°F/80°C) and it should come out fine.

That was an experience! Making it to drinking it, gave me so much peace. I had bought a whisk and bowl a year ago and it didn't turn out how I had hoped, I saw your post now and tried again. Sifting made ALL the difference and I added a little agave syrup this time, with whisked almond milk. So grateful for your advice!
